The Hawaiian archipelago, or chain of islands, provides critical habitat for seabirds and shorebirds alike. Some fly in after soaring over the ocean for thousands of miles to follow in the webbed footsteps of the generations before them that visit to nest and raise their young. Some hatch on the islands and will live out the entirety of their lives here. One thing that unites each of these feathered creatures is their need to keep the beat, wingbeats that is. Flap your wings and join our flock as we learn more about the birds of Hawai’i!
